

Fabulett 1933 - A Queer Tale of In/Visibility: The critically acclaimed show stops at the The Other Palace Studio before heading to the Edinburgh Fringe.

Berlin, February 1933, the new German leadership orders the closure of all ‘venues which promote immorality’. But Felix, the emcee of the depraved Fabulett, still has a story to tell. Set at the transition from one of the most liberal societies of its time with the world’s first gay rights movement, where the first queer anthem was composed, one of the first gay themed movies was made, and the first gender affirming surgeries were performed, to one of the biggest tragedies in human history, Fabulett 1933 is a queer tale of in/visibility featuring music, ideas and lives classified as ‘degenerate’ by the Nazis.

Following its critically acclaimed run at the 2022 Edinburgh Festival Fringe, where the show was praised for its "nuanced recognition of the capacity even for certain LGBT people to enable authoritarianism, intentionally or inadvertently" (★★★★ The Scotsman) and "the clear relevance and applicability of the show’s message today, with the re-emergence of the far-right now being a threat to so many, in diverse and different places" (★★★★★ Edinburgh Guide), Fabulett 1933 comes to The Other Palace Studio for an Edinburgh Preview.

Fabulett 1933 is a one-person musical written and performed by Michael Trauffer (he/him), under the musical direction of James Hall (he/him). The original story is set around true events, and while the original score is composed by Trauffer, the show also features English versions of songs by Mischa Spoliansky and Friedrich Hollaender.

‘This is not just a show. This is an awakening.’

★★★★★ Broadway Baby

★★★★ The Scotsman

‘Incredibly thoughtful – and often moving’

★★★★★ Edinburgh Guide
